PROJECT DESCRIPTION

The Kane County Division of Transportation is undertaking a feasibility study for the reconstruction of the Randall Road at U.S. Route 20 interchange. The effort will include work to address geometric deficiencies as well as to increase capacity at the interchange.

The initial phase of the work, the scope of work that will be considered under this request for statements of interest, will be a feasibility study to examine various alternatives for improvements to the existing intersection. These alternatives may be further defined within a subsequent phase I engineering study. The feasibility study will include extensive coordination such as with the Illinois Department of Transportation (due to Route 20) and the City of Elgin, public outreach, and, external coordination regarding historical properties and 4f/6f considerations (if necessary).

Given the proximity of various local roads such as Larkin Avenue, Weld Road and Foothill Road, the study will also consider impacts to those facilities.

At the County's discretion, the selected consultant for the feasibility study may be retained for the following phase I and phase II design effort, if those efforts proceed.

The feasibility, preliminary and final design will utilize the federal aid process. The project will be completed under applicable IDOT guidelines, including the BLR and BDE manuals, as well as KDOT standards.
